This album represents the meeting between Camarón and Paco de Lucía, who back at that time was a young guitarist from Algeciras (southern Spain) with whom Camarón formed the most important flamenco 'duet' in the second part of the 20th Century. The relationship between them keeps on growing and the year after releasing their first album together, Camarón tours with Juanito Valderrama along with Niña de la Puebla, la Niña de Antequera, Juan Habichuela and Dolores Abril. In 1971, Camarón releases two new recordings with Paco: 'Cada vez que nos miramos' and 'Son tus ojos dos estrellas'. 'Cada vez que nos miramos' is a complete and solid album by the best cantaor of all times that shows Camarón's proficiency with all flamenco Palos.
